Excerpt: .even, as time went on, remembered her. That is, after Lady Smedley s days; for the Governor s wife had been down to Bonne Esperance more than once, and Mimi had stayed at Government House, and appeared at several functions during her reign. The last had been a large garden party, given in honour of the Fleet. It had begun so well, and Henry had felt quite proud of his mother in her pretty white lace dress--straight out from Paris--and broad-brimmed rosedeked hat. But the end had been disaster. For at tea time the little woman, unable to resist the superabundance of tempting looking sweatmeats, had filled her pale pink parasol full of them; and nervously opening it--as she stood making her adieux to the Governor, in full view of the entire assembly--had been deluged by a shower of gaily tinted bon-bons. On which...
