Maund, In the summer of 184 a number of journeymen printers, who had been connected with the Boston Daily Times, then published at No. 3 State street, conceived the idea of starting a morning paper of their own, and, in the following December, carried their design into execution. Their paper was called the American Eagle, and was published at No. 5 Devonshire street, third door from State street, at three dollars a year and one cent per copy, by an association of practical writers, under the firm of Baker, French, and Barnum & Co. The proprietors were announced to be Albert Baker, John A. French, George W. Barnum, George H. Campbell, Ainos C. Clapp, J. I. Xlonroe, Justin Andrews, hugustus h. Wallace, and James D. Storvers and W. H. Ivrrldron was also at one time associated with them. The Eagle, as its name indicated, was devoted to the interests of the Native American party, which was then a comparatively strong organization and among its first regular and occasional editorial contributors were Dr. Paliner,...
