Joseph H. Nichols. And have ye struck at last to conquering Age Your green broad pennons that so bravely waved Ye should have fallen on Ocean, in the rage Of storm and battle, by blue waters laved, Where mortal thunders might with Heavens engage In dirges oer your honor only saved. Yet though the lands your tomb, I love ye well, For, had ye tongues, what stories might ye tell! Many and many a time have ye looked down, When chimed the bells, on the prayer gathering, From days when young forms wore the flower-wreathed gown Till now, crowned with an almond blossoming, All youthful traces, save deep piety, flown, Their childrens children to the organ sing, And, seated by them, words of comfort hear, With cherub cheeks composed in holy fear. Oft have ye viewed the...
