

Consent and Medical Decision-making: Bridging the Gap Between Doctor and Patient

By Mary Donnelly, Carol Coulter

Cork University Press. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Consent and Medical Decision-making: Bridging the Gap Between Doctor and Patient, Mary Donnelly, Carol Coulter, The traditional Hippocratic Oath sworn by generations of doctors requires the physician to "prescribe regimen for the good of my patients according to my ability and my judgement and never do harm to anyone." The patient's views as to what constituted her "good" did not have to be canvassed. Like many hitherto unexamined aspects of Irish society, the relationship between doctor and patient has been re-evaluated in recent years. In theory, at least, we now live in a society where the patient, and not the doctor, knows best, where an individual's consent is a fundamental prerequisite for any medical procedure. Yet, in spite of the importance afforded to consent by legal, ethical, and medical commentators, the reality is that genuine and informed consent to medical procedures is often absent. Many patients, either by choice or because they have no alternative, still leave the responsibility for health-care decisions in the hands of physicians. This book looks at the requirement for consent to medical procedures. It considers how this requirement has assumed the important position it now holds and...

READ ONLINE
[6.16 MB]

Reviews

The publication is great and fantastic. I am quite late in start reading this one, but better then never. I discovered this pdf from my dad and i suggested this ebook to discover.

-- Linnie Kling

A brand new eBook with a brand new standpoint. I could possibly comprehended everything out of this composed e publication. Your life span will likely be enhance once you total reading this pdf.

-- Willa Ritchie