CHAPTER XI IT will take me two weeks, perhaps three. I ve told Bruce to look in. He will be down to-night. Now, there s no necessity for you to be nervous. He or Bob Hargraves can sleep here. Everybody will know why they re doing it, and nobody is going to gossip about you, and if they do they can t hurt you. Roland sat on his horse prepared to start for Auckland. He had been called away by telegram the next afternoon. As he spoke he went through his leather satchel to see that he had not forgotten anything. Oh, my cheque-book; I must have left it in the brown coat pocket, he said, fidgeting. Alice hurried in to get it. He was thinking of something else when she handed it to him, so he forgot to thank her. Well, bye-bye,...
